After months of work by the FCA-GKC Funeral Price Survey Committee, our biennial survey is ready. The committee collected more than 1,000 prices from 114 area funeral homes. The information we gathered can be condensed into these numbers.

By Steve Nicely, FCA-GKC Secretary

During the past two years, when consumer prices increased almost 5 percent, the average price of a standard funeral increased less than one percent. That is welcome news to those preferring the comforting rituals of standard funerals including embalming, visitation, and a funeral service. The $5,873 average price does not include a casket or cemetery costs, which could easily add $3,000 or more to the total. Though standard funerals were once the choice of most families, now a majority of consumers are making less-costly choices.

Immediate burial was the only basic option that exceeded the rise in consumer prices, with an increase of 6.1 percent. At an average of $3,814, immediate burial shaves $2,000 from the standard funeral average by eliminating embalming, visitation, and a funeral service. However, immediate burial still requires cemetery expenses. The $3,814 average price does include the lowest-priced casket offered by funeral homes.

Direct cremation, with an average price of $1,829, is the least-costly method of body disposal. It involves transporting the body to a funeral home, placing it in a container of fiberboard or cardboard, cremating it, and returning the ashes to the family. No embalming, visitation, or service are involved unless consumers choose to add them.

Cremation now is the choice of most people here and nationwide, and it makes cemetery expenses optional. Many cemeteries have columbaria where

Have you ever wondered about organ donation or whole-body donation? There can be a lot of mystery and confusion surrounding the topics: Can I register for both organ donation and whole-body donation? How do I register? What could exclude me from qualifying as a donor? Who arranges after-death transportation and other details?

To help answer these questions and more, we have enlisted some local experts to address the myths and explain the realities. Join us from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 2, for the FCA-GKC annual meeting to learn more about organ and body donation. This informative event will take place at the Kauffman Conference Center, 4801 Rockhill Road, Kansas City, Mo.

Hurting from a loss? Grief support helps

By Jacque Amweg, LCSW, LCSW, FCA-GKC Board Member

Grief is a natural response to loss. It requires giving ourselves some time to go through the experience. If we have a significant relationship with someone, we can expect to be significantly affected by that person's death, even if the death is expected.

Grief responses are as individual as each person is. It is common for a variety of reactions—emotional, mental, spiritual, physical, and social—to be present with grieving. Grievers may experience some or all of these, or other, reactions:

Numbness ~ Sadness ~ Memory difficulty
Headaches ~ Chest pain ~ Anger ~ Loneliness
Questioning of faith ~ Guilt ~ Crying
Isolation or withdrawal ~ Anxiety ~ Relief
Questioning of reasons for the death
Loss of meaning in life ~ Depression

Societal expectations often influence how we understand our own grief. Sometimes other people imply that we should “get over it” and get right back to life as it was. Sometimes they don't provide the support we feel we need or deserve. (Many people find it hard to be around others who are in pain, so their response may be to try to cheer the griever rather than simply being present to the grief.)

Built-in or “natural” support systems are very important to moving through the grief process. Most people will manage grief with their current or evolving support system (family, friends, faith community, supportive colleagues, and so on). But 7 to 15 percent of people have complications in grief and would benefit from more formal grief support.

As a grief support counselor, I have received many calls over the years from people who have had a death in the family or from a family member who is concerned about someone grieving. They share comments such as, “I'm crying all the time and I can't think of anything else.” “I have not cried yet. Is there something wrong with me?” “My family member is taking it hard and is very depressed.”

These questions may come soon after the death and don't usually indicate problematic grieving. Then my role is to reassure grievers that what they are experiencing is a natural reaction. I like to imagine a piece of clay formed in the shape of the relationship. The shape and size of that piece of clay also represents the shape and size of the grief.

If people are struggling in grief, I encourage them to explore whether help is needed in one of these three areas:

Self-care. This is different for each person. Is there a need to improve eating, exercise, and sleeping? Including meaningful and creative activity in the day is important. Schedule an appointment with a physician if there are any concerns.

Expression of grief. We all express grief in our own way. Not everyone feels comfortable with talking, and not everyone expresses grief with tears. Maybe it's talking or tears, but maybe the way to express grief is by writing, building something, scrapbooking, art, poetry, music, creating a scholarship, or engaging in physical activity. Unexpressed grief is not healthy emotionally or physically.

Staying connected. For some people it's natural to be around others who offer support. Some people, though, may begin to isolate themselves and avoid others, maybe out of the fear of “breaking down” or being misunderstood. Time alone is healing and important, but maintaining connections is also important. Phone calls with friends and family or coffee with a friend can help. Spending time with people who are understanding and can be present with your pain is very healing.

When more is needed

Some factors complicate grief and can make it more likely that the griever needs formal support. These include:

- Loss of a child • Suicide
- Traumatic death circumstances
- Childhood separation anxiety
- A dependent relationship with the deceased
- Lack of resilience or adaptability
- A conflicted or estranged relationship
- Sudden death • Multiple losses
- A “disenfranchised” loss, when the death is stigmatized or the loss is not recognized
- Severe mental illness • Childhood loss of a parent

When hospice services are used at the end of a person's life, the hospice provides grief support when needed for loved ones of the patient. Hospice agencies are a good resource for finding individual grief counseling or grief support groups.

If a hospice was not involved, consider seeking a therapist who specializes in grief support. Psychology Today has a searchable database for finding therapists in any location with any imaginable specialization. Visit www.psychologytoday.com and look for “Find a therapist.”

Solace House is a good resource in our area for family grief support. □

Your donor support needed

The board of FCA-GKC expresses sincere gratitude to the following donors for $320 in support during the past six months:

Gerald Carley
E. and B.H. Cummings
William E. and A. Patricia Ross
Doris Yonker

Our board recognizes that it is falling short in necessary fundraising efforts and is attempting to address the issue. The recent level of participation is not enough to sustain us. We have a current balance of $2,988. That should be enough to cover newsletter and funeral price survey printing and mailing expenses this fall, but we need your help going forward.

FCA-GKC is an all-volunteer, nonprofit, public-service organization. Thank you in advance for your continued support.

consumers may purchase niches in walls inside or outdoors for ashes. Names and dates are inscribed on covers and recorded in the cemetery's records. Other families scatter ashes in special places or keep them for memorial services at a later date. The chief disadvantage of cremation is the large amount of energy consumed in the cremation process and its negative effect on the environment.

The prices charged by each of the 114 funeral homes in the survey appear on pages 5, 6, and 7. They reflect a wide range of choices in each of the three types of funeral services. For instance, the highest immediate-burial price is six times higher than the lowest in our findings. The highest direct cremation is nearly five times higher than the lowest. The highest standard funeral is nearly three times higher than the lowest.

Not appearing in this newsletter are the prices funeral homes charge for individual services such as embalming, body transport, visitation, vehicle rental, etc. Those prices for all 114 funeral homes are available on the FCA-GKC website, funeralskc.org. Here are the area-wide averages for each of the services:

Averages of individual services

Basic services	$2,131
Embalming	$815
Visitation	$423
Funeral service	$520
Hearse	$413
Limousine	$347
Graveside service	$397
Body preparation	$320

One of the individual services, titled "basic services" on funeral home general price lists, is rather nebulous. This is an amount that the Federal Trade Commission allows funeral homes to charge for "overhead" expenses. Basic services fees in the survey range from a low of $1,295 to a

Our panel of speakers will include professionals representing two area medical schools with whole-body donation programs—the University of Kansas Medical Center (KUMC) and the Kansas City University of Medicine and Biosciences (KCU)—along with the Midwest Transplant Network (MTN), a federally designated not-for-profit organ procurement organization serving Kansas and the western two-thirds of Missouri.

Megan Maciel, LCSW, community engagement coordinator at MTN, will teach us about organ donation. Megan is a licensed clinical social worker who's passionate about providing education on the importance of organ, eye, and tissue donation. Her role also provides her the opportunity to cultivate stories from donor families and recipients.

Joining us from KUMC will be Dale Abrahamson, PhD, chair of the Anatomy and Cell Biology Department, and Patricia Yewell, who coordinates the Willed Body Program. Abrahamson has overseen the Willed Body Program since 1998, ensuring that the program provides the utmost respect, dignity, and appreciation to donors and their families. Yewell has been with KUMC's program for 1 1/2 years and has been a licensed funeral director and embalmer for more than 20 years. Working with the Willed Body Program at KU enables her to make a difference for others by coordinating the invaluable learning opportunities that whole-body donation provides to students.

Representing KCU's Gift Body Program will be Barth Wright, PhD, chair of anatomy and professor of anatomy at KCU, and Felicia Harris, gift body coordinator. Harris has worked with the gift program for 18 years and is proud that KCU treats its donors like patients.

"We want students to know that this is their first patient," Harris said. "We always work with a very high level of ethics."

KCU has recently started using a new preservation method that makes bodies more lifelike, providing a student learning environment that is more like surgery.

Be sure to join us on Nov. 2 to learn more. The event is free and open to the public. Social workers will receive two contact hours. Register by visiting www.funeralskc.org, emailing fca.gkc@gmail.com, or calling 816-561-6322. □ high of $4,195.

Our team took great care to double and triple check the entries to ensure accuracy. When you review the dates of the price lists on the chart, you'll notice that some funeral homes have not updated their prices since our 2016 survey and that some figures are missing. We can only report what we are given. We also must understand that funeral homes can change their prices at any time without notice. □

Live-streaming of funerals

By Jacque Amweg, FCA-GKC Board Member

Many of us had the recent experience of seeing two live-streamed funerals of famous public figures, Sen. John McCain and Aretha Franklin. I haven't heard final numbers for the size of the television audiences, but these days it is not unusual for us to be long-distance participants in such celebrations of life.

The funerals of celebrities can attract massive television audiences. Princess Diana's funeral was seen by 2.5 billion, Ronald Reagan's by 35.7 million, Michael Jackson's by 3 billion, and Margaret Thatcher's by 4 million. We feel somehow connected to some public figures. It can be inclusive and meaningful to watch their live-streamed funerals.

What about the rest of us? There is a gradually growing trend toward live-streaming as a choice for our funeral planning, too—not for a public presentation, but to include friends and relatives unable to attend in person. Most of us don't anticipate the kind of numbers mentioned above, but there is more and more often a place for live-streamed funerals in our mobile and dispersed society.

Changes in technology have influenced our funeral options for years. Families have been bringing home audio- and video-recorded remembrances of the ceremony since the technology has existed. Live streaming adds an additional function. Besides providing a recording of the service for later, it allows us to "be there" in real time even when we are thousands of miles away.

There are pros and cons to consider when choosing whether to live-stream a funeral. The experience will never replace in-person attendance, but it's the next best option. It is secure and accessed with a password given to those who want to participate with an internet connection. It can provide a much-needed sense of presence with the deceased and with mourners as they grieve.

Concerns about live-streaming include issues that come up when using any technology. Participants may not feel comfortable with it if they are not tech-savvy. Occasional glitches in signals and equipment on either end can be frustrating. It could seem isolating to those watching at a distance if they don't have in-person support at this difficult time.

It is unclear how many funeral homes in Greater Kansas City offer streaming services. When it is available, it may involve an additional charge or it may be included in the total cost of the funeral. Some funeral homes have the required equipment and others contract with outside providers. If live streaming is important to you, it should definitely be on the list of questions to ask funeral providers when seeking their services. □

The big picture

Payable-on-death accounts

When you look at our new survey of funeral prices in this area, you can understand why funerals can be so worrisome. The average cost of a standard funeral here is $5,870, not counting a casket and cemetery expenses. That's a major purchase in most households, and funeral operators expect to be paid in full at the time of need.

But somewhere in each of our newsletters, FCA-GKC reminds you that we recommend preplanning but not prepaying for funerals. Why?

We answer that with questions: What if you move? What if you change your mind? What if the funeral home is sold or goes out of business? What if you can't make the payments? What if someone raids your account?

In short, prepaid funerals can be restrictive and can make you vulnerable.

Instead we advise opening a "payable-on-death" savings account at a bank or credit union, naming a trusted relative or friend who agrees to function as the beneficiary. You visit a funeral director, decide what you want for the funeral you're planning, and deposit the estimated cost in the account. When you die, the beneficiary withdraws the money, makes the arrangements, and pays for the services you've chosen. These payable-on-death accounts are also known as Totten trusts.

Rather than being restrictive, a payable-on-death account offers flexibility. You can withdraw the money any time you get in a bind and replace it later. You can open and close the account at any time. The named account beneficiary may be changed at will and cannot withdraw the funds until you die. Any interest generated in the account remains there. The funds are available to be spent anywhere; they are not tied to a particular location or funeral home or funeral plan.

Are there disadvantages to payable-on-death accounts? Sure. The account beneficiary could become ill and unable to follow your wishes. The account could have too much or not enough money to do the job. Not every circumstance can be anticipated. That's when we react as best we can. Trusted relationships are the basis of such accounts, and it's important for both parties to understand these contingencies ahead of time.

The information contained in our newest funeral price survey offers lots of flexibility for changing circumstances. We see a wide range of prices charged for similar services. We can spend $8,000 for a standard funeral or $4,000 for an immediate burial or $2,000 for a direct cremation. And we can choose from a wide range in each category. That's flexibility. □

FCA-GKC 2018 Area Survey of Funeral Home Prices

This chart contains prices for three basic types of services (and their average area prices):
Standard Funerals ($5,873) prices include fees for transporting the body, body preparation, embalming, visitation, funeral service, hearse, limousine, graveside service and a basic services fee. Caskets and cemetery costs are extra.
Immediate Burial ($3,814) prices eliminate embalming, visitation and funeral service, but includes the cost of the lowest priced casket offered. Cemetery costs are extra.
Direct Cremation ($1,829) skips embalming, visitation and funeral service, but includes an alternate container, such as fiberboard or cardboard.
 All prices were taken from the General Price Lists (GPLs) that funeral homes are required by federal law to provide to consumers.

How a funeral price survey comes together

By Kathleen Foster and Ginny Farney, FCA-GKC Board Members

The 2018 Funeral Price Survey was prepared by board members and volunteers who worked tirelessly for months. From left, they are Ginny Farney, Kathleen Foster, David Johnson, and Lyle Van Vleet.

When we were asked to take the lead on this project, I'm not sure either of us knew quite how large a task we were about to undertake. The process involved months of research, making phone calls, stuffing envelopes, visiting funeral homes, and compiling data. By the end of it, we had scoured more than 100 general prices lists (GPLs) to compile the prices charged by funeral homes for their services in our area. While the task was daunting, we were excited to approach the process with fresh eyes and new ideas.

To streamline the process, we did as much as possible remotely. We began our search online, finding that 14 funeral homes posted their GPLs there. The FCA-GKC applauds them for doing so because most don't. We—and consumers everywhere—wish they would.

We were also pleased with the overwhelming cooperation and support we received from the funeral homes in Greater Kansas City. Almost all responded to our calls for GPLs via mail or email and were quick to help when questions arose. Several funeral directors told us they appreciated the work we do, noting that it was an essential resource for folks in our area.

Our team still had to travel to collect a few price lists in person, and for that we owe our volunteers a debt of thanks. Particular gratitude goes to Jim Fitzpatrick, volunteer and former board member, who showed great tenacity in tracking down our last missing GPL.

With new leadership comes fresh perspectives and a few changes to our survey. We have increased the number of funeral homes surveyed, from 95 two years ago to 114.

We expanded the survey's geographic area, adding listings in Missouri's Northland and south into Harrisonville. The format of the survey has also changed a bit since its last iteration, as we have grouped the listings by cities rather than counties. We would welcome your feedback on these changes.

The FCA-GKC often receives calls and emails from outside the metro seeking information, so next on our to-do list is extending our survey to Topeka. With the help of Greta, our volunteer in Topeka, we hope to have that price survey completed and on our website by the end of the year. We also plan to expand the survey into St. Joseph, Jefferson City, and Columbia. Keep an eye on our website, funeralskc.org, for those additions.

We welcome volunteers to help expand our reach! Would you like to volunteer? Call us at 816-561-6322 or email us at fca.gkc@gmail.com. Leave a message and we'll be in touch.

The survey was the culmination of a great cooperative effort. Kathleen chaired the survey committee, communicated with the funeral homes, and organized the data for auditing. Ginny managed volunteers, organized the collection of GPLs, and helped transcribe the data as numbers came in. Survey veterans David Johnson and Lyle Van Vleet dealt with the numbers and charts: David checked the figures, made corrections, and passed it on to Lyle, who entered all those names and numbers into the final format. We were lucky to have such a great team, and hope that you will find our efforts useful. □
